Blurb: Four bunny brothers--Spot, Hunter, Lucky, and Joey--all live with their parents in a forest of maple and oak trees. Spot, who is the youngest, but more than a baby, has to deal with the assumption his three older siblings are excluding him from the day's activities. What does one adolescent do to get the attention he deserves from his older brothers? Pray! With Spot's determination to overcome his feelings of loneliness, he falls to his knees and asked for God's help, leaving his problems in his hands. The following morning, after breakfast, all four brothers head outside to play. Once again, Spot is left feeling alone. Joey, the oldest, realizes Spot sitting all alone imagining how he must be feeling deserted. He hops his way over to Spot and confronts him by asking why he's not playing. During their discussion, the other two, Hunter and Lucky, find their way to both Joey and Spot. After all apologizes are said and accepted, Spot, who once felt rejected, is happy again to be interacting in their daily playtime.
